

In an infinite number of guises, an aurora's animated architecture, shifting shapes, and flowing colors can assemble, transmogrify, and dissipate in a matter of seconds or over several hours. A rare multicolored full corona bursts over Fairbanks, Alaska, on November 7, 1998, and is preserved for posterity in a three-second exposure.